

Planning For Balanced Development: A Guide For Native American And Rural Communities

POTENTIALLY, Mississippi is one of the most independent states in the American Union.

Fully capable of sustaining herself in the necessities of existence, she lacks but the addition of industrial payrolls to insure for her a prosperity that is balanced and abundant.

The very ease with which she keeps her stomach full has contributed to Mississippi's negligence in keeping abreast of modern business advancement. The perfection of her climate, her low cost of living, her plentiful basic resources—these, her greatest assets, have helped create the self-complacency that has retarded her.

It is these same assets, so familiar to Mississippians that they are commonplace, which now offer to a great state her greatest opportunity.

Mississippi is fortunate that she has discovered the fallacy of a one-crop economy at approximately the same time industry has discovered it must decentralize. To those who would take the leadership in bringing to their own communities the blessings of a new prosperity, solidly founded on a practical balance between agricultural income and factory payrolls, we offer the following guide—

Q. What is the "Balance Agriculture with Industry" plan?

A. It is a plan whereunder municipalities (corporate towns and cities, counties, or supervisors districts) may obtain new industries through public financial channels.
